

The Editor's Page

You probably didn't recognize your Spring issue of the Journal. Of the many changes, the most obvious is the name change . . . we're now the Journal of Extension. There's a new cover, the format is two-column, and we've changed our headline type and footnoting procedure.

Editorially we're becoming, even more than in the past, a professional journal for those involved in extension and adult education action programs. We're constantly searching for well-written articles with creative, innovative, and often controversial ideas.

Included in this issue is a return post card; fill it out and send it to us with your reactions. Also, whenever you have feelings about the Journal or a particular article or book review, write us a letter. Points of View will be devoted to your reactions.

Note some changes on the Editorial Committee. Dr. Lowell Watts, Director of Extension from Colorado, is the new Chairman. Other new appointments to the committee are Dr. Charles Beer, Director, Division of Agricultural Service, Technology and Management, Federal Extension Service, Washington, D.C.; Dr. Harold McNeill, Director of Community and Environmental Development, Appalachian Center, West Virginia; Dr. Joseph Paige, Dean of Community Education and Director of Cooperative Extension Service, Federal City College, Washington, D.C.; and Dr. Belden Paulsen, Chairman, Center for Community Leadership Development, University Extension, Wisconsin.

Finally, a word of appreciation to G. L. Carter, Jr., former editor of the Journal. G. L. helped give birth to the Journal and nurtured it for seven years. Much of what the Journal has become is due to G. L.'s untiring leadership. Currently G. L. is on foreign assignment to Ireland.
