

The Editor's Page

Did you notice anything different about the cover of the Spring issue of the Journal? Did you wonder about the significance of the little, thin, black stripe located directly below the black band at the center fold of the outside cover? At a meeting this past winter, the Editorial Committee discussed how each uses the Journal and what might be done to improve its usefulness. Someone commented: "I'd sure like it if I could identify specific issues of a volume of Journals on my shelf! I can usually remember if something appeared in the Spring or Winter issue, but I hate to have to pull each issue off the shelf to find the one I'm looking for." With that, the notion of putting "harsh marks" on the back of each issue emerged . . . so on this Summer issue, which is Number 2 of Volume X, you'll find two harsh marks; the Fall issue will have three, and the Winter, four. It was an easy thing to add and we hope that those of you who are "organized" this way will find it helpful.

Incidentally, I've been heartened by the responses and ACTION taken relative to my comments on The Editor's Page of the past issues and in conversations I've had with some of you. It shows you care about the Journal. Keep it up! We're excited and looking forward to developing a theme issue for the latter part of this year.
